BATH'S AFFAIRS.—MAYOR WAKEFIELD'S ABLE ADVICE.

Mayor Wakefield, in his inaugural, expressed views, and made suggestions, which show him conversant with every branch of the city government, and capable of meeting every emergency. After referring to the depressed condition of commerce, which, he said, was the most serious, he advocated the utmost economy in managing the city's finances. Nothing should be expended, he said, except for the necessities of the city. He also advocated the collection of delinquent taxes, $75,000 in amount. In the police department, efficient men should be chosen, and salary of the city marshal increased to compensate a competent man. Educational appropriations should be liberal but not extravagant. The fire department should be well sustained, and the city well cared for. He advocated permanent improvement in streets and sidewalks, and the extension of municipal aid to the contingent water works, said health, comfort and the growth of manufacturing. Two new streets, one an ample supply of pure water. In fact the whole of Bath, he said, in his business-like tone and excellent diction, an angry and vigorous and thoughtful management of city affairs.

At the last meeting of the Bath city government, the refunding commission reported on refunding bonds to the amount of $20,000. During the year the treasurer has exchanged the refunding bonds for the city bonds, and the reduction of city debt account. Of this amount the commission had previously exchanged $10,000 of the refunding bonds for the city bonds, and the refunding commission had previously exchanged $10,000 of the refunding bonds for the city bonds, and the refunding commission had previously exchanged $10,000 of the refunding bonds for the city bonds.

WAS IT A SUICIDE?
Some six weeks since a young lady apparently twenty years of age, of a blonde complexion, rather prepossessing in appearance and somewhat above the medium weight, came to Bangor from Boston, and boarded a Main street boarding house and endeavored to get employment in the York mill. Failing in this she took up with canvassing for a paper in which occupation she continued until about ten days since, when one day after the dinner hour she started out as usual ostensibly to canvass, since which time nothing whatever has been learned of her whereabouts. For several days previous to her disappearance she had appeared in rather a melancholy mood and the young lady had settled for her board weekly and leaving behind a large, open valise filled with clothing. Her sudden and prolonged absence naturally begins to excite fears that something not altogether right may possibly be connected with the girl's disappearance. She is supposed to have relatives residing in Manchester, N. H.

RIM DID IT.
